Starting Points - print and word concepts: Jenny Newby-Fraser

The seven areas selected as starting points (listening vocabulary, phonological awareness, sound letter relationships, print and word concepts, letter formation, environmental print and high interest words) provide support for working out how to read and write words to enable learners to access and work within the first steps of the learning progressions. They represent critical skills and knowledge that are essential for supporting adult literacy development (Starting Points, 2008, p. 3). The areas overlap and work together and are not represented in strands or a sequential way as in the progressions. Today's webinar will briefly look at
